PROGRAM OVERVIEW

Do you feel burdened to help hurting people and families overcome challenges and heal from trauma? The need for competent, compassionate mental health professionals continues to grow, and SFBC&TS's degrees in counseling can equip you to minister to the mental, emotional, and spiritual needs of your community.

SFBC&TS's fully accredited counseling programs can help you develop into an ethical, well-trained pastoral or mental health counselor with the knowledge, values, and skills to help others make positive changes in their lives. You'll get the training to further your current human services career, or enter the discipline for the first time.

With degree specializations at the bachelor's level, you're sure to find the one that meets your professional needs. Since the degree options are available on campus or 100% online, this gives you rich opportunities to network and connect with your professor and classmates without taking time away from your family, work, or church.

And because SFBC&TS is dedicated to Preparing Men and Women for Ministry, you'll receive quality professional training as a mental health counselor from a faith-based perspective. Your counseling degree from SFBC&TS will equip you to reach new professional heights and shape a better world by championing what matters to you. And that's what matters to us.

Please note: Each individual state has its own specific requirements for licensure. Please see your state professional counselor license board for more information.
